NEW TROUBLE FOR THE LANDLADY.

A Bound Brook man has shot himself because his landlady would not marry him. It is not denied on any hand that the lady entertained something more than a passing admiration for her lodger. Her passion, however, was not sufficient to cause her to overlook his somewhat ngly temper, which threatened family squalls of frequent occurrence in case of a wedding.

Meanwhile, a New York landlady appears in court as defendant in a grand Won't I give him a comin', her him at the gate Won't I give him alease, well calculate; largery case, because of too equiperant a bord, see them faces; wolf agine try; parallel state of affection. It was not manifestation of affection. It was perhaps only a mere coincidence that her boarder should have missed a $3,000 package at just the moment when she ceased to hold him in her embrace. But he put a darker look on the matter and had her arrested.

It becomes evident from these instances that a landlady's troubles do not end when board bills are settled and complaints of cold breakfasts adjusted. It appears that her affections, their discreet manifestation and their thoughtful repression must become the subject of her intense solicitude. Neither suicide for a disappointed admirer nor police court for herself presents itself as a cheerful alter-

YALE'S FIRST "CO-ED."

Yale is to have a "Co.ed." This is the college slang term for a girl student. Miss IRENE W. Corr. daughter of ex-Congressman Corr, of the Norwich, Conn., district, has passed the necessary examinations and will enter the University next

This courageous young woman will confront, bisides the college curriculum and the Caculty, 1.500 fellow-students of another say. It will be a new departure all around, for the college, for Miss Corr and for the boys. For Yale has never tried the plan of co-education.

Something seems to convey the assurance, however, that it will be a pleasant departure. That it will be the beginning of much pleasanter things to come, up as framier?

Raggsby de Jaggs (sadiy)—I'm saving up my summer clothes, old man; when there will be more than one my real Yale girl. College students of the sterner sex have been heard to speak dispagagingly of "co-eds." Yet such acquisitions have been received such acquisitions have been received courteously and gladly claewhere, and they will be at Yaie. I saw an interesting sight on Beckman rounded by a crowd of equally tattered companions, was reading to them the details of the quadruple execution from a copy of THE EVENING WOLLD. His pronunciation was rather faulty, but it was unbeeded by the eager listeners, who took in the details with exciamations peculiar to street arabs.

As a Sixth avenue Elevated train stopped or Thirty-third street, last evening, a delicate The entries closed to-day for the annual looking man, without an umbrella (it was raining at the time) got up and started for the platform. He was slightly hindered, and tooking man, without an umbrella (it was the platform. He was slightly hindered, and Guard 284 (notice the number, Col. Hain) closed the gate before he got there. The guard on the car behind had not given the signal, however, and 284 had his hand still on the bell cord. Ho kept it there long enough to have let out a half dozen passengers. But he didn't let out he one man who wanted to go. Finally the was carried to Forty-second street, whence there neight be such a thing as the decent treatment of passengers.
